ABOUT ME

Robyn is an educator, designer, and advocate whose work sits at the intersection of education, recovery, and the arts. With over a decade of experience supporting individuals and families facing systemic barriers, she brings a multifaceted background in housing services, addiction counseling, educational systems, and justice-impacted communities. Her creative lens allows her to identify opportunities, reimagine systems, and design programs that honor both individual dignity and structural realities.

She has partnered with multidisciplinary teams to develop trauma-informed, culturally responsive programs in arts education, reentry, and workforce development. These experiences have shaped her commitment to restorative justice and her belief in the transformative power of learning and creative expression. Robyn is dedicated to building pathways that help individuals move toward stability, purpose, and meaningful careers.
