ABOUT ME

Steve Trippe is an accomplished facilitator, presenter, partnership developer, strategic planner, and program designer. He is a nationally recognized expert in youth workforce policy and practice, work-based learning, and systems collaboration. He is a seasoned veteran in youth work. Starting his career as a service provider in San Francisco in 1975, and he has been with New Ways to Work for over 40 years, serving as President and Executive Director before transitioning to senior fellow in 2021. He is the principal designer of New Ways' All Youth-One System approach and developed Work-Based Learning toolkits for states, cities, school districts, community colleges and model programs. He has been involved in youth employment, career development, and education policy at the national, state, and local levels. He developed and implemented a number of model initiatives, including: the Foster Youth Pathways to Employment Initiative; the California (Foster) Youth Transition Action Team Initiative; New Ways Workers; Diploma Plus and Communities and Schools for Career Success in California; the Quality Work-Based Learning Initiative; the California Youth Council Institute; the School-to-Work Intermediary Project and Network; and the Sonoma County and Riverside Youth Ecology Corps. He most recently served as a partner in the design and implementation of the California Opportunity Youth Network. Steve served as Treasurer of the National Foster Care Coalition, co-chaired the California Foster Youth Career Development and Employment Task Force, and served on the Leadership Team for California's Breakthrough Series Collaborative on Independent Living Program Transformation. He was a member of the National School-to-Work Advisory Council and chair of the National Youth Employment Coalition.
